On March 13, 2014, Secretary of the Interior Sally Jewell addressed Department of Interior employees at the Federal Building in Sacramento and by phone throughout northern California. Employees from Reclamation, Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management Bureau of Indian Affairs, Office of Inspector General and U.S. Geological Survey were treated to her talk on key elements of her mission, drought conditions in California, affordable health care, public lands, wildlife refuges, expansion of the Coastal National Monument, tribal water rights, National Parks and other subjects. She also discussed her tour through C.W. Jones Pumping Plant (formerly Tracy Pumping Plant).

The Secretary shared her appreciation for the service of employees and support in educating and mentoring young people for the future of water conservation programs, public lands and other issues that affect the government.
